Contracts for the dismantling and raising of the Paris Exposition buildings have been signed, and the job has been given to a Chicago firm which tore down the buildings after the Columbian Exposition, and also those of the Omaha Exposition. The contract for the work was signed the day the Paris Exposition opened. Lumber is very dear in France, and there will be 75,000,000 feet available after the close of the Exposition.

Tomorrow Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Bennett will celebrate an event that opportunity for such offers itself to but few. The event is the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding, they having journeyed side-by-side for a half century of time. We congratulate them in the serene evening of their life, that they are enjoying good health, happiness and the possession of a large circle of warm friends, and we trust that they may see many more anniversary days.

Pittsburg's Surplus Earth.

Pittsburg needs room for territorial expansion. Not in the way of simply extending her sphere of influence or her geographical limits, but a place to put her surplus earth. Some men are digging a tunnel under Mt. Washington, and they have in the disposal of the earth brought out of the entry one of the most difficult problems of the undertaking. The contractors at the next station are forced to haul the dirt from the excavation away up the Monongahela river to find room for it. Trains pass through the Panhandle yards on the South side daily carrying to the westward rock and earth taken from the new grades that are under construction near the Birmingham station. Jones & Laughlin are contemplating a barge line to carry slag from the furnaces to convenient points up the river where the waste may be dumped. At Duquesne a gulch has been redeemed by filling it with furnace refuse, and it is to be a valuable addition to a large railroad yard.

The furnaces are vexed by the disposal of surplus material more than any other interest. Day after day they fill cars with waste, and waste that is carried here from distant points. Were it material dug from the Pittsburgh soil the holes made could accommodate the rubbish. But it is the refuse from Michigan ore and Blair county limestone. There is no room in Pittsburgh, and there is a growing scarcity in Pittsburgh for room to put even the earth taken from cellars where new buildings are going up. As streets are graded lower in the hills and buildings are erected on the graded streets Pittsburgh needs more room to dispose of her surplus earth. She needs more territory with gulches, and that need is going to be a factor in building and in mill practice that will continually grow in cost.—Pittsburg Times.

Paris Letter.

Paris, France, July 2.—Every thoughtful traveler has doubtless felt how much more interesting are the people of a country than are their monuments, cathedrals, museums, or even their international Exhibitions. But how can a writer tell about the people of a country or portray them, or catch the million evanescent flashes by which they show all the littleness and greatness of their character? The French are said to be a shallow and volatile race, but is M. Taine shallow? Can anyone after reading "Lourdes," "Rome," "Paris" and his stern heroic defense of Dreyfus call Zola volatile? There are hundreds of Frenchmen no less serious and scarcely less distinguished. Any for every great writer of the other sex in our language it will not be difficult to mention De Staël or a Sand. These are exceptions, of course, but the great Frenchmen have not written without readers, and their great scientists and philanthropists are not without honor in their own country. Nevertheless, outside their books or paintings or statues, we do not like the French, nor do they like us. This mutual antipathy, however, does not perhaps prove more than mutual ignorance and prejudice. We do not like anything unlike ourselves. Think of our vanity in this! The best way to understand the people of a country is to let them talk and reveal themselves, and I shall, with your permission, give your readers some literal specimens of French journalism. For a week King Oscar, of Sweden, has been in Paris. Last Sunday he went with the President to the Grand Prix, or biggest horse race of the season, and during the week he has been "doing" the Exposition and the following is a literal report from a Paris paper of his last day in Paris:

"The King of Sweden and Norway consecrated the last day of his sojourn in Paris to visiting the Pavilions in the street of Nations of the Exposition. The Spanish pavilion was invested with a peculiar grace and solemnity by the presence of the Infanta Eulalie, who insisted upon doing the honors of the occasion to Oscar the second in the Palace of her country on the Seine. That one respectfully kissed the hand of the princess who saluted him with a gracious bow. The princess had around her M. De Leon y Castillo, Ambassador of Spain; the Marchioness Arco Hermoso, her dame of honor; the duke de Sesto, Commissioner General of the Spanish Exposition; le Comte de Belloncia don Juan, le marquis de Villalobar. (No wonder the country is in decadence when so much time is lost in remembering and giving such titles.) The King particularly admired the magnificent tapestries of the 15th century which cover the walls of the different salons." (He missed the best thing if he failed to see Boadil's sword and tunic in the second story front.)

"In the German Palace the King of Sweden was more than once surprised. It is magnificent," he said, transfixed by the rich production of the famous salon of Sans Souci, and he added with an exactitude that was somewhat cruel, "France has not as beautiful a collection of the French school of that period."

In Finland the King was received with significant cordiality and one of the Swedish Commissioners was overheard to say, "our lost province is today a Grand Duchy of Russia."

As his time was limited, his Majesty passed hastily through the pavilions of Belgium, England, Hungary, Bosnia, Austria, the United States and Italy, not, however, without a friendly word with the Commissioner General of each country.

A portrait of a woman by Gainborough in the English Palace arrested his admiration and he sat down for a moment in front of it.

In one of the halls of the Hungarian Palace, King Oscar remarked the entire side of the room decorated with the headings of all the newspapers of Hungary, "Zu viel! Zu viel! trop! trop!" (too many, too many) exclaimed the King. What would the monarch have said if he had seen displayed the titles of all the French papers? (The United States has ten times as many as France.)

But there is something else that the King wishes to see, another attraction he wishes to enjoy. It is the rolling pavement. And now behold all the suite of the monarch on the platform. Oscar, the second, stepped on in the most natural way in the world, and laughed much to see himself thus carried along, and to see all his aides de camp step from one platform to the other. (There are two parallel platforms moving in the same direction at different velocities.)

Meanwhile the hour had arrived and the King profiting by the lesson of his aide de camp stepped off the platform like a real Parisian.

Naturally I wished to approach the King and to receive from his own mouth the good words which he has expressed to the personages of his entourage pending his sojourn here. I would have liked to have heard him repeat that he loves France and adores Paris, but, alas! the protocol lifts itself as an impassable barrier between the sovereign and a simple journalist. Nevertheless I have, all the same, a compensation and consolation. If I have not seen the King I have been received by M. le baron d'Akerhielm, his chief secretary, and this is what he said to me: "His Majesty quits Paris absolutely ravished and without regret. The King would have liked to stay longer in Paris. He loves France and Frenchmen from the depths of his heart, and he is deeply affected by the warm friendly reception, so truly sincere, which has been accorded him in the official world, and also by the Parisian people. As for your Exposition, the King considers it a veritable marvel. He has visited it every day of his stay and could scarcely quit it to return to his palace. In short you cannot exaggerate how much my master is enchanted. There can be no other word about his trip to Paris. He is contented with everything and everybody (content de tout et de tous.)"

Wild West Show Wednesday.

Colonel Baden-Powell, whose gallant defense of Mafeking against the Boers made him famous, is known in the British army and throughout the world as one of the greatest rough riders of today. He is a born horseman and a trained scout, who has made a study of that branch of military service, and in writing on that subject this gallant English soldier singled out Colonel Cody (Buffalo Bill) as the highest type of the vigilant scout and hunter in the world. Such praise from the acknowledged foremost cavalryman of the English army speaks volumes, and that Colonel Powell and Buffalo Bill take pride in their warm personal friendship is no wonder. Colonel Cody will visit us within a few days with his wonderfully exciting and thrilling Wild West Exhibition which is bigger and more varied than ever before.

River News.

The Pittsburgh Times says: Much to the disappointment of the local river men rise which was expected to come out of the Allegheny river yesterday did not materialize to any great extent and instead of sending out about 17 tows with millions of bushels of coal only two steamers were sent out, and they went very light. The upper Allegheny is still reported rising, but river men have rather lost confidence. The steamers which went south are the J. C. Risher and Fallie, with about 40 flats and from 6 to 10 barges, all light. These two steamers were helped to Safe Harbor by several of the other river combine tow boats.

A report of the snags, wrecks and rocks pulled by the government snag boat Woodruff between here and Cincinnati has just been made and it shows that the boat did very good work. There were some very bad obstructions in the stream but the Woodruff removed all which were reported.

Gas Well Creates Sensation.

The Cairo Oil Co.'s well drilled on the Devil farm below the Kanawha about five years ago and abandoned is creating considerable excitement. Recently it was noticed that the water in it was considerably disturbed and some of the persons living in the neighborhood placed a barrel over the top of the well, threw a mound of dirt over this and then inserted a small tube. The gas coming through the tube was ignited and made a flame fully a foot high. On Thursday night persons living within a half mile of the well were startled by a loud noise which came from the direction of the well and lasted fully five minutes. An investigation was made Friday morning and it was found that such a head of gas had come in that it had blown the top off the barrel and scattered it in all directions. Friday night it broke loose in the same manner, and the residents believe it will develop into a strong gasser.—Sentinel.

Stealing Oil Tools.

The oil fraternity in the Big Run field have been exceedingly annoyed and subjected to heavy losses by junk thieves within the past few days.

Thursday night the thieves made a visit to the Big Injun well that is being drilled by the Six Brothers Co. on the C. D. Uhl farm. There is such a heavy pressure of gas that the drilling is done in daytime, the well being closed down at night.

No one was about the well at the time and the thieves had a clear field. They stole a new bull rope which cost $65 a few days ago, broke open a tool chest, stole a lot of tools and clothing belonging to the driller and took some other articles.

The power house on Billy Patterson's lease was also stripped of brasses and other junk. Mr. Uhl, of the Six Brothers Co., came down here yesterday in search of their stuff, but was unable to find it.—Sentinel.

Is This the Boy?

Pittsburg, Pa., July 14.—Conrad Brown, of 1434 Rush street, now thinks that the unknown boy killed in the naphtha explosion at Parkersburg, W. Va., on July 4, may be his son, William aged 17 years, who ran away with a circus about six weeks ago.

Nothing was left of the boy's body, by the explosion, but one of the lower limbs, and the father intends going to Parkersburg to try and identify the limb if possible. Young Brown was employed as heater at the Pressed Steel Car works in Lower Allegheny. His father believes that his son was with circus which was at Parkersburg at the time of the explosion. The boy's mother is prostrated by the supposed fate of her son as is in a serious condition. Superintendent of Police Muth has received word from Parkersburg that the remains have not yet been identified.

An Odd Accident.

Rural mail-carrier W. C. Buck met with a peculiar accident Friday morning as he was making his route. He had stopped at a farm house east of town, in front of which a cow was tethered to a long rope which lay across the horse's path. In some manner the horse became entangled in the rope, and the cow made a sudden lunge, drawing the rope tight and causing the horse to be thrown off his feet. The vehicle was the only thing damaged, both wheels being broken. Aside from that the accident was but slight.

Rescue Home.

Soliciting funds has not been pushed, only pledge cards issued, as yet, for several good reasons. Among them the waiting to receive indorsement by the County Union, which we are happy to inform the public was heartily given at the time of W. C. T. U. county convention. There is now no good reason why the committee should not rapidly push forward the work. A mass meeting will be held in the near future and able speakers will present the need of such a Home, when it is expected the people will respond generously with their contributions. We have delayed our report, waiting for money known to have been donated to be turned over into the treasury, that we might be able to give a correct report each month. Below is a combined report since beginning the work up to July 1, which is the best we can do at this late day:

Amount donated.....	$87.50
Expenses incurred.....	30.50

Balance.....$57.00

Persons to whom pledge cards have been given will please sign them and return to Mrs. Nan H. Dye. For July already we have received $30, which altogether thus far gives the neat sum of $117. TREASURER.
